

and that "Solly" Friedman, his collector, levied tribute every Monday night. Sixty per cent, Brolaski said, went to the operators of the resort, and 40 per cent to the bosses.

Brolaski testified that Chief McWeeny asked him to bring Hyman and Kenna together, so they would work in harmony.

He told of a meeting with Chief McWeeny in Washington Park late at night, Hyman being present, when, he claims, the chief thanked him for his help in the slugger cases. Brolaski was the man who ran down Fred Irish, on whose testimony Maurice Enright was convicted for the murder of Vincent Altman. At the time of the trial Inspector Hunt said he had never met Brolaski until the slugger troubles arose.

Witness said he met Inspector Hunt May 27, and had several meetings with him subsequent to that, most of them being in isolated places. The first one occurred at Monroe avenue and the Midway. Another meeting occurred at the same place, and a third the night of June 9, near the Washington Park hospital.

The meeting of June 9 was in regard to the Altman murder and the finding of Fred Irish, but at the earlier ones Brolaski said Hunt had discussed with him the gambling business. He said Hunt was sore at McGinnis, a big gambler, because the latter had "double-crossed" him.

Brolaski said the conversation on June 2 was about Hyman. He told Hunt that Hyman was getting ready to "squawk" because he had not been given certain gambling privileges he was promised. Hunt said, according to the witness:

"Well, it won't do him any good to talk, for Wayman and I are just like two peas in a pod. Hyman can't go to him like he did when Healy was state's attorney. Hyman can get 60 per cent of the Burlington game proceeds. He oughtn't to kick."

Brolaski further said that in his conversation with the inspector, Hunt wanted to know why he (Brolaski) and "Hinky Dink" Kenna were not friendly. Witness answered he didn't know, unless Hyman or McGinnis had "double-crossed" "Hinky" in the payment of $40,000 from the Brolaski Investment Co. (A race track gambling combination.) Witness gave the money to Hyman to give to Kenna. Hyman insisted he handed it to McGinnis for Kenna, but the latter never received it. The money was for police protection.

Inspector Hunt, last night, denounced Brolaski as a "liar, falsifier and perjurer." He denied ever having discussed gambling concessions with Brolaski.

---

Cuba, says Sydney Brooks, will succeed in going it alone because she is becoming physically cleaner all the time. Cleanliness is a pretty good thing, in countries, people or dishes.

---

November is the month for meteors—also for turkeys.